

Because the FCC now allows virtually all radio stations to be owned by a single company, there is no competition in the industry. I live in South Florida, and with as many radio stations as there are, they all play the same thing. There is no variety any longer.

Satellite radio should be permitted to broadcast any information they choose. It is a subscription service and there should be no restrictions on what they can offer.

If radio stations were actually interested in providing a public service, rather than just making as much money as possible, there never would have been a reason for satellite radio. They have created the situation where their market share is shrinking. Let them either provide the service that was once required of them, or go out of business!

But please do not penalize satellite radio for broadcast radio's mistakes.
